BRITISH AND FOREIGN.

1. The Lute Player.

Hon. John Collier.

The Hon. John Collier was born 1850; son of late Lord Monkswell; commenced his art education under Sir E. J. Poynter, P.R.A., at the Slade Schools, London, and afterwards in Paris under J. P. Laurens, and later under Sir Alma Tadema, R.A. One of his best works, "The Last Voyage of Henry Hudson," was, in 1881, purchased by the Chantrey Bequest Trustees.

He is represented in the Art Gallery of South Australia by "The Priestess of Delphi," and Portrait of Sir T. Fowell Buxton, Bart.

Purchased—1887.

2. Diogenes.

J. W. Waterhouse, R.A.

John Williams Waterhouse was born at Rome, 1849. Studied at the Royal Academy Schools, and first exhibited at the Royal Academy, in 1874, "Sleep and his brother Death." Among his principal works are the "Lady of Shalott," "The Emperor Honorius" and "Circe Invidiosa" (in the Art Gallery of South Australia); and "Ulysses and the Syrens" (in the National Gallery of Victoria). Elected A.R.A. in 1885, and R.A. in 1895. Died 1917.

Diogenes, the celebrated Cynic philosopher—born at Sinope B.C. 414; a disciple of Antisphenes, who was at the head of the Cynics. Diogenes adopted the principles and character of his master. Renouncing every other object of ambition, he determined to distinguish himself by his contempt of riches and honours, and by his indignation against luxury. He wore coarse garments, and, according to his biographers, took up his residence in a tub. At Corinth he was visited by Alexander, who, on approaching him, said, "I am Alexander the King," to which he coolly replied, "And I am Diogenes the Cynic." When asked by the monarch if he could render him any service—"Yes," he replied, "by not standing between me and the sun."

Purchased—London, 1886.

3. The Satyr's Family.

No. 4.

12 ft. x 9 ft. 7 in.

4. Chaucer at the Court of King Edward III.

Ford Madox Brown.

Ford Madox Brown was born at Calais in 1821. Studied at the Bruges Academy in 1837, and later at the Antwerp Academy. Painted in Paris and Rome, and settled in London, 1845. Madox Brown belonged to the realistic school—with a tendency towards Pre-Raphaelitism—though he never claimed to have started the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood.

This work was begun in 1845, exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1851, and at the Great Paris Exhibition of 1855; awarded the Liverpool prize of £59 in 1858. In 1856 a duplicate was started by the artist and completed in 1867. This second work was presented to the Tate Gallery in 1906.

“John of Gaunt, who was Chaucer’s patron, is represented in full armour. His son, afterwards Henry IV, holding his sword and shield, stands immediately behind Chaucer; his horse, likewise, is in the yard beneath. Edward the Black Prince, now in his fortieth year, emaciated by sickness, leans on the lap of his wife Joanna, known as the Fair Maid of Kent. There had been much opposition to their union, but the Prince ultimately had his way. To the right of the old King is Alice Perrers, a cause of some scandal at the Court. Goldsmith names her Alice Pierce; at this distance of time the name is immaterial, the subject is the same—the stumbling block of kings and commoners from David downwards. Seated beneath are various distinctive personages. A troubadour from the south of France, half jealous, half in heart-struck admiration (this is a portrait of W. Michael Rossetti); a cardinal priest on good terms with the ladies; a jester forgetting his part in rapt attention to the poet. Two dilettante courtiers learnedly criticising; the one, in face, is meant for the poet Gower, the other, in cowl, for the historian Froissart. In left-hand corner, the page represents Thomas Woodstock (fifth son of Edward III), also a patron of Chaucer, conversing with Lady de Bohun, afterwards his Duchess. Other historical figures represented are—at the feet of the Black Prince and his Princess, their son, afterwards Richard II. Behind them, the Princess Margaret, memorable for her learning and for her regard for Chaucer, and the Princess Royal. Behind Lady de Bohun, is Chaucer’s wife Philippa (with red head-dress), speaking to her sister Catherine Roet, afterwards, as a third wife, Duchess of John of Gaunt. The lady, in middle foreground, seated by the fountain is the Countess of Warwick, conversing with the cardinal. In Chaucer himself the artist has given the portrait of his early and constant friend, Gabriel Dante Rossetti.

Among his most important works may be mentioned—“The Last of England,” 1855 (Birmingham Gallery), “Chaucer at the Court of King Edward III,” “Work,” 1863 (Manchester Gallery), “The Entombment,” 1869, “The Trial of Wickliffe,” 1886. Madox Brown died October, 1893.

Three works by this artist are among the recent additions to National Gallery of Victoria: “Baptism of Eadwin,” “The Entombment,” and “Haidee and Don Juan,” the first in pastel, the other two in water-colour.

Purchased—London, 1877.

7. The Scoffers.

Frank Brangwyn, A.R.A., R.E.

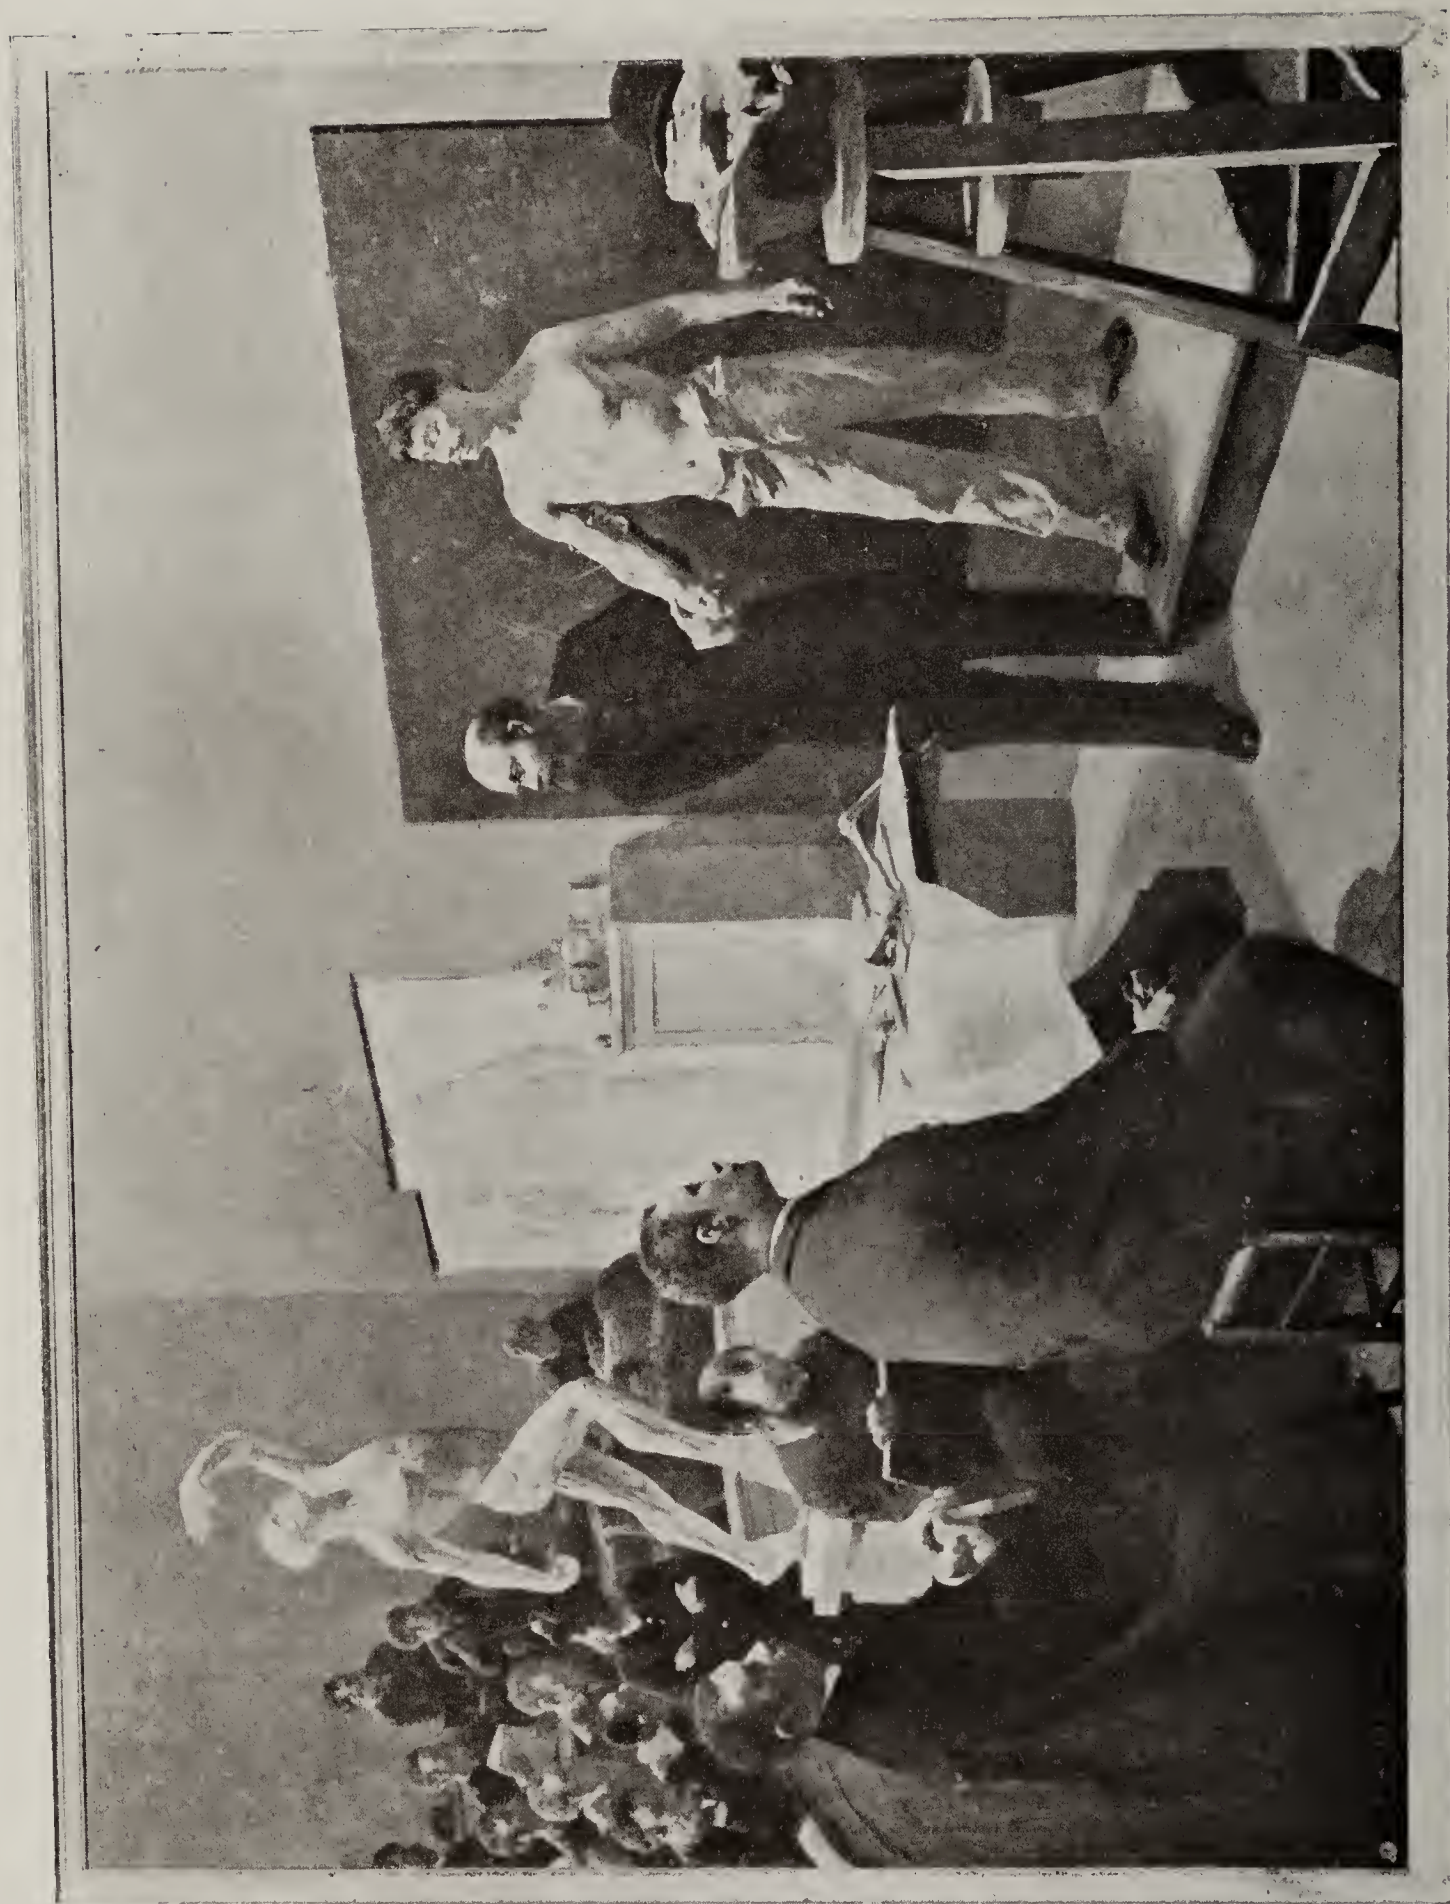

Frank Brangwyn was born in Belgium, 1867; he never had any regular art training. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy when he was 18, and came into notice a few years later by his picture, the “Burial at Sea,” exhibited at the Artists’ Association, and afterwards at the Paris Salon in 1891. 37. The Tower of Justice—The Alhambra, F. Poussart.
Spain. French.

The Alhambra was the ancient fortress and palace of the Moorish kings of Granada, situated on a hill to the north of the city of Granada. Its extent was such that it was capable of containing an army of 40,000 men within its precincts. (In the Water Colour Court will be found a general view of the whole palace.)

The Alhambra was completed in about A.D. 1314; and, with the city it dominated, was the seat of regal power, and the abode of the arts, science, and literature of the time of the expulsion of the Moors from Spain by Ferdinand and Isabella in 1492. Subsequently it was occasionally inhabited by the Castilian monarchs, and the Emperor Charles V commenced another palace within its walls, which has remained unfinished to the present day, and only too conspicuous from its incongruity with its surroundings. (The present painting fully illustrates this.) The exterior of the Alhambra, in its majestic simplicity and the absence of all ornamentation, would lead no one to suspect the exquisite beauty and glories of its internal decoration; these must be seen to be realised. (Two drawings in the Water Colour Court, by H. Stanier, the British Vice Consul at Granada, and fac-simile reproductions in stucco—in Basement Court—illustrate small portions of decorations which extend throughout the whole palace.)

57. The Gordon Riots.

Seymour Lucas, R.A.

An episode during the Gordon "No Popery Riots," in London, 1780.

"In various quarters parties of soldiers were firing upon the mob, and the fire was sometimes returned—people were seen removing their goods in haste and alarm from the numerous houses, which had been set on fire; the streets resounded with the groans and yells of the wounded and the drunken. Nearly 500 persons were killed or wounded."—Hume.

A bill having been passed in 1778 by the legislature for the relief of Roman Catholics from certain penalties, a Protestant Association of London was formed for the purpose of procuring its repeal—of which Lord George Gordon was president. On the 2nd June, 1780, he headed a vast and excited mob of 50,000 persons, whom he decked with blue cockades, and marched from St. George's Fields to the House of Commons to present a petition for the repeal of the measure. Dreadful riots ensued—which lasted five days—during which many Catholic Chapels, Newgate Prison, the mansion of the Chief Justice, and other places were destroyed.

The troops were ordered out by the King, when 210 of the rioters were killed, 248 wounded, and 135 arrested, of whom twenty-one were executed. Property to the value of £180,000 was destroyed. Lord George was himself tried for high treason, but got off on the "absence of treasonable design."

The intelligence was communicated to Drake when he and some of his officers were amusing themselves with bowls on the Hoe. 116. Penitents in Spain. “Los Penitentes.”E. Mélida.
Spanish.

Don Enrique Melida was born in Spain, and studied in Paris under Meissonier.

“Los Penitentes,” or “humildes,” are not convicted criminals, but men who, conscious of some sin, voluntarily do penance, by paying for the privilege of helping to carry the representations of Christ, and the Virgin, and Saints, during the Semana Santa, or Holy Week.

The celebration of “Semana Santa” in Spain is, or used to be, a succession of functions of great interest.

On each day, commencing on Wednesday evening, draped platforms, bearing the above representations, issue from one of the principal churches in every city, and many other towns, and parade the streets; they are carried by the “penitentes,” hidden beneath the drapery, sometimes as many as twenty to a platform—and they pay for the privilege, in the poorest mining centres as much as 6 reales, 1s. 6d., each (a day’s pay for underground work is about 2s. 6d.)—and they pay for their own dresses.

The “representations” are often of a high order, and no expense is spared in their decoration. As much as from £200 to £300 have been spent on a new dress for the Holy Virgin, in a small, out-of-the-way city in “Old Castile,” where the salary of an official of fair position amounted to only £40 per annum—but this was nearly fifty years ago.

Generally, considerable numbers of extra “penitentes” march in the procession, from whom relays of bearers can be drafted, as the work is somewhat severe. Their dress varies in different parts of Spain; in the mining districts of Jaen (Southern Spain) they are bare-footed, but wear long robes of sackcloth, with grass-rope girdles and marks; each bearing a long wax candle; they are of all classes—miners, artisans, peasants, and a few gentlemen.

On the Thursday the dress is changed, all wear black gaberdines, but the same knotted rope-girdles; they no longer wear masks, but high peaked caps, often two feet high above the head, and are still bare-footed. On Good Friday a crown of thorns, three inches wide, is added to the head-gear. The “Selling of the Lord,” the Crucifixion, and the “Watch-night” follow; and various other scenes of the Passion. Saturday passes in comparative quietness. On Easter Sunday all is changed; from the earliest morning, every one you meet—the servant on the doorstep, the passing peasant, the ubiquitous beggar—greets you with a smile, and the phrase “Christ is risen!” to which you reply “He is risen indeed.”

Exhibited, Paris Salon, 1890. Purchased—Paris, 1890.

E. Lansyer.
French.

Emmanuel Lansyer was born in France, 1835. Pupil of Courbet and Harpignies. Painted principally in Brittany. Well known as a draughtsman and colourist. Died, 1893.

Le Château de Loches was, in mediæval ages, a fortress of the first order—including a King's residence—was subsequently converted into a prison, and became a second Bastile—no less terrible than that of Paris.

Loches was inhabited in the times of the Romans; was taken and sacked by Pepin and Carloman in 742; belonged to the house of Anjou from 886 to 1205. In 1249 the chateau became a royal residence, where Charles VII and Agnes Sorel, Louis XI, Louis XII, Henri III, and Charles IX lived.

Agnes Sorel, mistress of Charles VII, left 2,000 crowns to the Church at Loches, on the condition that her remains should be kept in the choir. Subsequently the monks suggested to Louis XI, who was hostile to her, that her character was not quite worthy of the sanctity of the place, and that her remains should be removed. "By all means," replied the King, "and, as you will then have no title to her legacy, you can transfer the whole concern to me." The monks thought better of it, and the poor remains of "La Belle des Belles" remained in their resting-place, until her ashes were cast to the winds by the fanatics of the "Reign of Reason" in 1789.

In the 14th century the English held possession of this fortress for some fifty years.

Louis XI turned it into a dungeon, and instituted the dread cachots de Loches—the horrible crimes committed in these dens of torture are better unrecorded.

Cardinal Balue invented, and added to these, iron cages, the longest space in which was 8 feet. In one of these he suffered the just retribution of spending eight years of the latter part of his life.

These cages remained in the chateau down to the year 1789.

Ludovico el Mor; Philip de Comilles; the Duc d'Alencon; the Bishops of Autun and Puy; the Comte de St. Valiero; O. de Biez, a Marshal of the King; Pierra de Navarra; the Comte de Lorraine; and many other notable persons suffered within these walls.

On its discovery, the chief accomplices were seized and executed, and Blood escaped to Holland. He afterwards found his way back to England, and on the 9th May, 1671, disguised as a clergyman, with three accomplices, he entered the Tower of London, and attempted to carry off the regalia; after nearly murdering the Keeper of the Jewels, he succeeded in getting off with the Crown, while one of his associates bore away the Orb. They were, however, pursued, arrested, and committed to the Tower. Blood was afterwards pardoned by King Charles, who restored to him his estate and £500 a year. He died in August, 1680.

He was elected A.R.A. in 1799, and R.A. in 1802. Turner lived such a retired life that little is known of it. Died in 1851, at a small cottage on the banks of the Thames—where he was known as Mr. Brooks—and was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral.

COPIES OF OLD MASTERS AND OTHERS.

1. 7 Oil Paintings. George Morland.
     (1 to 7 inclusive) (Landscape).

George Morland was born in London, 1763. Studied at the Royal Academy Schools, and exhibited there in 1779. Subjects were chiefly of country houses and domestic animals, his works being very popular; but after 1793 his pictures became slovenly repetitions of what he had done earlier in life—many of them being in a great part painted by pupils, or simply copies. Morland died in 1804.

Presented by Mrs. Anna Hills, sister of the late Mr. John Henry Challis.

2. Landscape. J. Crome ("Old Crome").

John Crome, known as "Old Crome," was born 1769. Self-taught, originally a doctor's messenger; afterwards apprenticed to a house and sign painter at Norwich, during that time he studied landscape, and copied pictures of the Dutch School. Founded the Norwich Academy in 1805, and exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1806. Between 1805 and 1821 Crome exhibited 250 works at the Norwich Academy. Died, 1821.

The name "Butter Tower" (which is found in connection with several European Cathedrals), is derived from the circumstance that the expense of building it was defrayed by money which was procured by the sale of dispensations to eat butter during Lent in the diocese of Rouen and Evreux, the permission in this instance having been obtained from Pope Innocent VIII.

John Chase was born in 1810. Studied under John Constable. Subjects principally Architectural. Died in 1879.

This wonderful specimen of Wood Sculpture of the 16th century is the chef d'œuvre of an artist named Andrea, who was falsely accused of assassination. Condemnation was about to be passed, but his talents, and his friends, procured a suspension of judgment; meanwhile he was ordered to employ himself on some work of art for the Palais de Justice. The Sombre Hall, in which he had been tried, struck his imagination, and he resolved to leave a work behind him which would perpetuate his memory. Andrea completed his task, but became overwhelmed with grief, from which his child, who was allowed to visit him, in vain endeavoured to arouse him. The Magistrates went to inspect his work, which called forth general admiration; they found him pale and haggard, more like a spectre than a man. On leaving him they promised to send news that day which would reanimate his heart. Early next morning the officers presented themselves at the prison with an order for his liberation, but when they entered his apartment they found Andrea dead.—Album Pittoresque de Bruges.

His wife, the Lady Godiva, besought her husband to give them relief, and pleaded so earnestly, that the Earl agreed to grant her the favour, but only on the condition that she should ride naked through the town. Godiva ordered a proclamation to be made that on a certain day no one should be in the streets, or even look from their houses; when, "Clothed on with Chastity," she rode through the town, and her husband, in admiration of her devotion, performed his promise. The Coventry halfpenny inserted in the frame was presented by Mr. Walter Bradley,

116. South Sea Whaling.

Sir O. W. Brierly, R.W.S.

Off Twofold Bay, 1867.

This work, Sir Oswald Brierly says, represents the flurry or death struggle of the whale; this frequently occurs when it is nearly dead, when it makes a desperate dash for the surface. The blow-holes become choked with blood, which is driven up from the head into two great spouts; not unfrequently the whale in his flurry rises in the midst of the boats, when a scene of the wildest commotion ensues—loud shouts from the men, “Stern all! Lay off!”

This whale is the whalebone or black whale of the Southern seas. This species of whale (Mysticetus) is destitute of teeth, but in their place the upper jaw is furnished with transverse layers of horny substance, called baleen or whalebone. When fully grown its length is from 50 to 65 feet.

Whaling was first undertaken on the Australian Coast by the “Britannia” in 1791.

(Original Etching.)
Presented by Mr. J. St. Vincent Welch, 1903.

3. Original Sketch. Phil May, R.I.
The subject of this sketch was a well-known clerical identity of Sydney.
Phil May was born at Leeds, 1864, and was left at an early age to fight the battle of life, as best he could. He received no regular art training, but by constant practice became an assistant scene painter at the Grand Theatre of Leeds, and earned small sums by sketching portraits of the actors, and performing other small jobs in connection with the theatre.
In 1882 he came to London, without money or prospects, and for a period of two years experienced many hardships. Eventually he obtained employment in connection with the paper Society, then followed an engagement on the St. Stephen's Review—later he accepted an engagement on the art staff of the Sydney Bulletin. He returned to London in 1890, but by that time had become famous as one of the cleverest and most original of modern draftsmen.
His work again appeared in the principal English illustrated papers and periodicals, and in 1894 he became a member of the Punch staff, and worked almost exclusively for that journal, till his death—in August, 1903.
Purchased—1903.

Æsculapius—called the God of Medicine on account of his wonderful healing powers. Serpents were particularly sacred to him, not only because they were used by the ancient physicians in their prescriptions, but because they were symbols of the prudence and foresight necessary to the medical profession.

Fort Pharos, Alexandria, was bombarded by the British Fleet, July 11, 1882. In that year, during the rising of Arabi Pasha, the Europeans were maltreated, and, as Arabi would not desist from strengthening the fortifications, an English Fleet, in the interests of the Khedive, bombarded the forts, and afterwards occupied the town.

The original sketch of "Dante's Dream on the Death of Beatrice," was exhibited at the Liverpool Academy in 1858. Painted in 1870, and acquired by the Liverpool Gallery in 1881.

Love leads by the hand Dante, who walks conscious, but absorbed as in sleep, into a Chamber of Dreams strewn with poppies, where Beatrice lies on a couch, as if just fallen back in death. Love bends over her with a kiss, while two dream-ladies hold suspended, for an instant, the pall full of many blooms.

Gabriel Charles Dante Rossetti was born in London, 1828. Studied at Sass's and the Royal Academy Schools in 1846, and afterwards in the studio of Ford Madox Brown. In 1848 he and others formed what is known as the "Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood." Rossetti, after a number of years of illness, died near Margate, 1882.

45. The Light of the World ... W. Holman Hunt, O.M., R.W.S. Print.

This photogravure is from the picture which is a replica of one painted by the artist between 1851 and 1853, and exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1854, and now in Keble College, Oxford. Its first reception was not encouraging. In art, as in other matters, established prejudice is such that whatever is unprecedented has to fight its way by slow stages. Among art critics it displeased the conventionalists, while among an extreme section of Church people, the naturalistic treatment was resented.

Dissatisfaction arose also in the secular world. Persons suspicious of ecclesiasticism, could see in the picture nothing but a servile contribution to sacerdotal ambition. Nevertheless the generation that was at first offended by the painting, soon became reconciled to the treatment and to the idea enshrined in the work, and in the fifty subsequent years it has been accepted as a standard illustration of an eternal idea.

The picture then, and again now, has been painted with no concern for party prejudice, either artistic, religious, or secular. It simply treats the eternal question, whether the summons made by the spirit of divine truth shall be welcomed or rejected, and the symbolism is of no arbitrary kind.

The replica is the property of the Right Hon. Charles Booth, of London, who very liberally afforded the Australian public an opportunity of seeing and studying this work, entirely at his own expense.

During the time that the work was on view in this Gallery, viz., 25 days, 302,183 visitors inspected it.

Andromeda, daughter of Cephus, King of Æthiopia, by Cassiope, promised in marriage to Phineus, her uncle, when Neptune drowned the kingdom, and sent a sea monster to ravage the country because Cassiope had boasted herself fairer than Juno and the Nereides. Andromeda was accordingly tied to a rock and exposed to the sea monster, and at the moment that the monster was going to devour her, Perseus, who returned through the air from the conquest of the Gorgons, saw her, and, captivated by her beauty, turned the sea monster into a rock, released Andromeda, and married her.

7.	The Valley Farm	... John Constable, R.A.	... Brunet-Debaines	... Print.

John Constable was born in Suffolk, 1776; for some years he studied the works of Claude Lorraine and Girtin. In 1799 he entered the Royal Academy Schools, and exhibited for the first time at the Royal Academy in 1802, endeavouring to adopt an original style, but his early attempts at English landscape painting were not successful, and it was not till he was 36 years old that he sold a picture to a stranger. His first success came from France, when a French speculator bought three of his pictures at the Royal Academy of 1821, and sent them to the Paris Salon of 1824, where his work was much admired, and several honours were bestowed upon him by the King of France. Constable died suddenly in Fitzroy-square, London, 1837.

He was elected A.R.A. in 1819, and R.A. in 1829.

A painting by Constable—"The White Horse," sold at Hemming's sale, London, in 1894, for £6,510. In 1820, £100 was paid for his "Stratford Mill," which was re-sold in 1895 for £8,925.

| 18. | The Shadow of Death ... | W. Holman Hunt,O.M., R.W.S. | F. Stacpoole, A.R.A. | ... A.P. |

From the Original, in the Municipal Buildings, Manchester.

“The Shadow of Death” represents the workshop of Joseph of Bethlehem at the hour of cessation of labour. A life-size replica was painted of this work, which the public called “The Shadow of the Cross,” but that title was not given by the artist.

William Holman Hunt was born in London, 1827, and studied at the Royal Academy Schools under John Varley. Exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1846. In 1849 he joined with Sir J. E. Millais and other of the so-called Pre-Raphaelites, and has been one of the most earnest apostles of that school of painting. His most important work is “The Finding of the Saviour in the Temple,” 1860—(See Engraving No. 64.) A remarkable work of his is the “Scapegoat,” painted on the shores of the Dead Sea in 1856, which caused universal criticism, and disappointed his warmest admirers. The “Scapegoat” was exhibited in Sydney in 1889. His work, “The Light of the World,” 1852, is considered to be one of the most symbolical works of the century, and the original is now in the Chapel of Keble College, Oxford. 31.	Atalanta's Race	... Sir E. J. Poynter, P.R.A.	... F. Joubert ...	... Print.

Atalanta, supposed to be the daughter of the King of Seyros, was born in Areadia, and, according to Ovid, she determined to live in perpetual celibacy, but her beauty gained her many admirers, and to free herself from their importunities she proposed to run a race with them. They were to run without arms, and she to carry a dart in her hand. Her lovers were to start first, and whoever arrived at the goal before her would be made her husband, and she was to kill all those she overtook. As she was almost invincible in running many of her suitors perished, till Hippomenes, the son of Macareus, proposed himself as her admirer. Venus had presented him with three golden apples, and as soon as he started in the course, he artfully threw down the apples at some distance one from another. While Atalanta, charmed at the sight, stooped to gather the apples, Hippomenes hastened on his course, arrived first at the goal, and obtained Atalanta in marriage.

James Abbott McNeill Whistler was born in America, 1834, and when a child was taken to Russia, where he resided for twelve years, afterwards returning to America, when he entered the Military Academy at West Point, which training he soon deserted for art. Going to Paris in 1857, he studied under Gleyre. He afterwards settled in London, and exhibited his works at the Dudley and Grosvenor Galleries. In 1877 he exhibited his famous portrait of Carlyle, together with several “Nocturnes.” The criticism by John Ruskin upon the price paid for a nocturne led to a suit for damages brought by the artist, who was awarded one farthing damages and no costs.

The “Portrait of his Mother” was bought for the Luxembourg. Whistler was known by his paintings and etchings—the former have been alternately abused and praised, the latter always received unqualified praise—but even his severest critics gave him his right to a place among the most original artists of his time. Whistler was for many years President of the Society of British Artists, and a member of many foreign societies. He was author of “The Gentle Art of Making Enemies,” “The Baronet and the Butterfly,” and “Ten o’clock.” Died July, 1903.

Carthage was a celebrated city of Africa—the rival of Rome. Supposed to have been built by Dido, about 869 years before the Christian Era, or 93 years before the foundation of Rome. Flourished for 737 years. It maintained three famous wars against Rome—called the Punic Wars; in the third of which Carthage was totally destroyed by Scipio, the Second Africanus, B.C. 147. The city was 23 miles in circumference, and, when set on fire by the Romans, burned for seventeen days.

-----	-----------------	----------------------	--------------------	--------

Jean François Millet was born near Cherbourg, 1814. Studied under Mouchel and Langlois in 1834. The Municipal Council of Cherbourg giving him a small pension, he was able to continue his studies in Paris, and in 1837 became a pupil of Delaroche, and the friend of Corot, Rousseau, and Dupré. He exhibited at the Salon in 1853, and in 1857 “The Gleaners” was painted.

The “Angelus” was painted in 1859, and sold for upwards of £20,000 in 1892. It represents two peasants in the field; hearing the distant bell of a church tolling the “Angelus,” they reverently bow their heads in prayer.

Owing to the care he bestowed on their execution, Millet is said to have produced only eighty pictures. His works always brought large prices, and after his death they rose enormously in value. Millet exhibited for the last time in 1870, and died in Paris, 1875.

|     | Westminster Abbey was commenced in the reign of Henry III, and consecrated, 1269. The Abbey was carried on by successive kings, and was not completed till 1735, when the western towers were built. The north front was rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren, but was lately pulled down and a new design substituted by Mr. Pearson in 1890. It is the burial place of thirteen kings and five queens of England.                |                              |                         |          |

| 89. | Richard, Duke ofGloucester, and theLady Anne.   | E. A. Abbey, R.A.            | ... L. Flameng ...      | ... A.P. |
|     | Edwin Austin Abbey was born in Philadelphia, 1852; and there studied at the Academy of Fine Arts. In 1871 he was employed by Harper Brothers drawing for illustrated publications, where he worked with C. S. Reinhart and Alexander. Abbey's reputation having become assured, he came to England in 1880, where he settled. Three years later he was made a member of the R.I.; in 1896, A.R.A.; and 1898, R.A. Died, 1911. |                              |                         |          |
|     | Abbey's black and white drawings alone made him famous as a draughtsman, more especially those of the "Comedies of Shakespeare," which were published by Harpers. From 1876 to 1890 his medium was principally water colour; his first appearance with oils was at the Academy of 1890.   |                              |                         |          |
|     | "Richard, Duke of Gloucester, and Lady Anne" was his greatest success at the Academy of 1896, the subject being doubtless one of the most dramatic episodes in Shakespeare. The moment selected is when the widow, by the coffin of her slain husband, is being wooed by the murderer himself, and is on the point of yielding to the specious pleader.   |                              |                         |          |
|     | Abbey's decorations, frescos, and other works gave him a foremost place among British artists. He painted the picture of the King's Coronation (Edward VII) in 1901.  |                              |                         |          |
|     | Leopold Flameng was born in Brussels, 1831. Studied under Calamatta; went to Paris in 1853, where he soon became noted for his illustrations in the Gazette des Beaux Arts . Has exhibited at the Salon since 1859; and has executed many etchings after Rubens, Rembrandt, and other famous artists.  |                              |                         |          |

57. Phryne before Praxiteles.

Percival Ball.

(Exterior Bronze-relief Panel.)

Praxiteles was a famous sculptor who flourished about 324 years before the Christian Era. The statue he executed of Phryne, who lived at the same time, was considered his best work, and was placed in the Temple of Apollo at Delphi.

Percival Ball was born 1844, and studied at the Royal Academy Schools. Visited Australia in 1886, and shortly afterwards accepted some important commissions, among which were the statues of Sir Wm. Wallace, at Ballarat, and Bishop Moorhouse, in the National Gallery of Victoria.

In 1898 he was commissioned by the Trustees of this Gallery to design a panel for the façade of the new building, which, on completion, was unanimously approved of. Mr. Ball left for England shortly afterwards to superintend the casting of the panel in bronze, but died in 1900 before he had finally accomplished his work.

The panel was completed in 1903.

CASTS FROM THE ANTIQUE, &amp;c.

1. The Boxers (2).

After Canova, a famous Italian sculptor; born, 1757; died, 1822.

From the Originals in the Vatican, Rome.

Presented by Sir James R. Fairfax.

2. Apollo Belvedere. (Bust.)

Original in the Vatican. Found, A.D. 1503, at Capo d'Anzio, the ancient Antium, birthplace of Nero. Sculptor supposed to be Calamus or Praxiteles. It was purchased by Julius II when Cardinal, and placed in the Belvedere of the Vatican, whence it derives its name.

Napoleon carried off the Apollo Belvedere from the Vatican, as the spoil of war, during his first invasion of Italy in 1796. In 1815 Canova, the sculptor, was despatched from Rome to Paris, and after many diplomatic rebuffs, finally succeeded in regaining the sculpture, pictures, and MSS., and was fêted on his return to Italy.

Apollo, son of Jupiter and Latona, was the deity who, according to the ancients, inflicted plagues, and in that moment he appeared surrounded with clouds. He had temples and statues in every country—particularly in Egypt, Greece, and Italy. According to Cicero there were four persons of this name.

3. Achilles. (Bust.)

The son of Pileus and Thetis, was the bravest of all the Greeks in the Trojan War.

4. Apollo Belvedere.

5. Venus de Milo, or Melos.

Venus Victrix, called Venus de Milo. Original in the Louvre, Paris. Found, A.D. 1820, at Milo, an island in the Ægean Sea (the ancient Melos), by a French peasant while digging near some sepulchral grottoes. The French Consul offered to buy it, but a monk (in disgrace with the Sultan) secured it as a peace offering to the Porte. While the statue was on its way to a ship a French frigate arrived with a Secretary of the French Embassy, bearing orders to purchase and hurry it off. A fight occurred between the French sailors and natives—and the former carried off the prize. The peasant received 6,000 francs for this valuable statue, which went to Paris as a present to Charles X.

Venus de Milo received from Paris the prize for her superior loveliness in her contention with Juno and Minerva on Mount Ida.

Presented by Sir Charles Nicholson, Bart.

9. Gates of the Baptistery, Church of San Giovanni, at Florence. Ghiberti.

The celebrated bronze gates, by Ghiberti, which Michael Angelo said were worthy to be the Gates of Paradise, form the most beautiful feature in the Church of San Giovanni, at Florence, now used as a Baptistery. They are divided into ten panels, representing scenes from the Old Testament. Their chief characteristic is that they represent a depth of design which is generally possible only in painting. In the various scenes may be seen four or five different levels of perspective, each completely distinct. The figures in Ghiberti's design are exquisitely modelled; their beauty culminates perhaps in the three angels who stand before the door of Abraham. But around the whole door, which is most carefully wrought in massive bronze is a border of fruit tied together by a riband, and enlivened by animals and birds, all of the rarest beauty. It springs on either side from two vases, in very low relief, and gradually rises in higher and higher prominence until it reaches its most complete development above the summit of the gate. Ghiberti died an old man, just after he had completed these, the last of the gates of the Baptistery, upon which his whole life had been spent; but he did not live in vain: his name stands amongst the highest on the roll of sculptors.

The State may be congratulated on having obtained a model of these famous gates, the gift of Sir James R. Fairfax, the Italian Government having refused to allow any more models to be taken.

10. Sir Charles Barry, R.A. After J. H. Foley, R.A.

John H. Foley was born at Dublin, 1818, and died 1875. Student at the Royal Academy Schools in 1834 and exhibited there in 1839. His last and most important work was the figure of Prince Consort in the Albert Memorial, London, commissioned by the Queen, and not cast until after the sculptor's death in 1875. Elected an A.R.A. in 1849, and R.A. in 1858.

20. Boy Extracting a Thorn. Original at Rome.
 Original said to have been found in the Tiber. Of the best period of Greek art.
 Presented by Sir Charles Nicholson, Bart.
21. An Amazon.
22. Diana of Colonna.
23. Discobolos. Original Bronze in British Museum.
 The original was executed by Myron at the close of the first period of Greek sculpture, about 470 B.C. There are several antique copies, showing the head reverted. Found, 1791, near Hadrian's Villa.
24. Laocoön.
 The original by Agesandros and Polydorus is now in the Vatican, Rome. It was found in Rome, 1506, on the site of the Palace of Titus.
 Laocoön, priest of Apollo, was commissioned by the Trojans to offer a bullock to Neptune to render him propitious. During the sacrifice two enormous serpents issued from the sea, and attacked Laocoön's two sons, who stood next the altar. The father attempted to defend the sons, but the serpents attacked him, and squeezed him to death. This punishment was inflicted upon him for his temerity in dissuading the Trojans to bring into the city the fatal wooden horse, which the Greeks had consecrated to Minerva, and for hurling a lance at the sides of the horse as it entered the city.
25. The Fighting Gladiator.
 Original at the Louvre, Paris. Found, A.D. 1503, at Capo d'Anzio, the ancient Antium. Sculptor Agasias, son of Dositheus of Ephesus.
26. Achilles and Lycāon. S. F. Lynn, A.R.H.A.
 Achilles, son of Pelcus and Thetis, bravest of all the Greeks in the Trojan War, was killed by Paris.
 Lycaon, the first king of Arcadia, was changed into a wolf because he offered human victims on the altars of the God Pan. He was afterwards killed by Achilles.
 Samuel Ferris Lynn was born in Ireland. Studied in Belfast, and Royal Academy Schools, London, where he exhibited portraits, statues, and statuettes, until 1875; died 1876.
 Presented by Mr. A. C. Garrick.

27. The Wrestlers.

28. Cupid Bending his Bow.

29. Cupid and Psyche.

Original in the Capitol, Rome. Found on the Aventine Hill.

30. Eve at the Fountain. (Head.)

E. H. Bailey, R.A.

Edward H. Bailey was born 1788, and died 1867. Studied under Flaxman at the Royal Academy in 1807. "Eve at the Fountain" was executed in 1810. He was author of the Statue of Nelson on the Column in Trafalgar Square, and also Governor Bourke's Statue, Sydney. Was a member of the Royal Academy for many years, and was put upon the retired list in 1863.

Presented by Sir Alfred Stephen.

31. Theseus.

Theseus, king of Athens, and a son of Ægeus, one of the most celebrated of the heroes of antiquity.

From the original in the east pediment of the Parthenon. Sculptor, Phidias.

32. Cephisus.

From the original in the west pediment of the Parthenon.

33. Venus de Medici.

The original by Cleomenes of Athens is in the Tribune of the Uffizi Gallery, Florence.

Presented by Sir Charles Nicholson, Bart.

34. Listening Slave.

Known as the "Arrotine" or "Rémoleur." Original in the Royal Gallery, Florence.

Presented by Sir Charles Nicholson, Bart.

35. Dying Gladiator (2).

From the original in the Capitol, Rome. Found on Pincian Hill, near the tomb of the Domitii, where Nero's body was burnt. The best authorities regard this work as representing a Gaul dying, not a gladiator: and it is supposed to be one of a series of figures illustrating the incursions of the Gauls into Greece.

Although this statue is still known as the "Dying Gladiator," the theory by which it received that name has long since been proved erroneous, partly by the fact that it is undoubtedly a product of Greek art, which knew nothing of gladiators, as they were a peculiarly Roman institution, and partly by the strong resemblance of face and figure to the descriptions of the ancient Galatians.

Presented by Sir Charles Nicholson, Bart.

36. Antinous.

Original in the Capitol, Rome. Found at Hadrian's Villa, Tivoli, and presented by Cardinal Albani to Pope Clement XII.

Antinous was a youth of Bithynia, friend of the Emperor Adrian. Some writers suppose that Antinous was drowned in the Nile, while others maintain that he offered himself for sacrifice as a victim, in honour of the Emperor.

37. Jason.

Original in the Louvre. Found at Tivoli.

This statue has been called Mercury and Cincinnatus, but is now considered to represent the famous leader of the Argonauts, hurriedly trying on one sandal in his haste to seek Pelias, usurper of his father's throne, and who had been warned, by an oracle to beware of the one-sandalled man.

It is of the Alexandrian or third era of Greek sculpture, and once stood in the Villa Negroni; was bought by Louis XIV. and placed at Versailles.

38. Boy Athlete.

39. Mercury.

Original in the Vatican.

This statue was once called Antinous, but Visconti has proved it to be Mercury. Found on the Esquiline Hill, near the Baths of Titus.

40. The Pyrrhic Dance.

Copies of Friezes (3) recently discovered in the baths of Agrippa, near the Pantheon, Rome.

The Pyrrhic Dance, said to be invented and introduced into Greece by Pyrrhus, the son of Achilles. The dancers were generally armed.

Presented by the Public Instruction Department of Rome, per favour of Sir James R. Fairfax.

41. Isidis Pompa. (Two casts.)

Presented by Sir James R. Fairfax.

42. Portions of Plinth and Cornice (5) of the Pantheon, Rome.

The Pantheon, a celebrated temple at Rome, built by Agrippa, in the reign of Augustus—and dedicated to all the gods. It was struck by lightning some time afterwards, and partly destroyed. Adrian repaired it, and it still remains at Rome, converted into a Christian temple, the admiration of the curious.

Presented by Sir James R. Fairfax.

43. Caryatid.

One of the six female figures which served as columns in the southern portion of the Erechtheum, a temple of the Ionic order, which stands near the north side of the Acropolis.

The word "Caryatid" is explained by Vitruvius, the Roman writer on architecture, as a reference to the "women of Carya," a town of Arcadia, who are always represented as architectural supports, by way of punishment for betraying the Greeks to the Persians." Probably, the Greek architects originally derived the idea from Egypt, where the use of human and other figures for columns was common.

44. Metopes (5).

Cast from the originals in the Elgin Room of the British Museum.

The Parthenon possessed the immense number of ninety-two metopes. Metopes were the sculptured blocks inserted in the spaces left between the slabs which represented the end of the beams of the roof. The five taken from the Elgin Room came from the south side of the temple. The subjects illustrate the battle between the Centaurs and the Lapithæ, at the marriage feast of Pirithous.

It will be observed that the metopes were sculptured in high relief, the reason for this was that they were so placed in the Parthenon that they could be seen at a distance, as they were 40 feet above the ground.

(See descriptive matter re Parthenon in frame.)

45. The Elgin Marbles—Frieze of the Parthenon.

The Parthenon, a temple at Athens, sacred to Minerva, was destroyed by the Persians, and afterwards rebuilt by Pericles—and still exists. All the circumstances which related to the birth of Minerva were beautifully and minutely represented in bas-relief on the front.

Presented by Mr. Thomas S. Mort.

46. Hermes.

The original, which is at Olympia, was discovered there by German excavators in 1877. It lay face foremost, on a heap of clay and rubbish, as it had fallen. The limbs were partly shattered, but the face and feature perfect. The legs, from the knees downward, were missing, also the greater part of Hermes' right arm, and the body and head of the child Dionysus. Afterwards, the right foot of Hermes was discovered, also the body and head of the child. Sculptor, Praxiteles (?).

The Mamelukes : An Arabic word signifying white slaves captured in war or purchased at market. They originated in the importation of a large number of Turkish slaves from the Caucasus, or Asia Minor, in the middle of the 13th century. Nearly all the exquisite mosques that still adorn Cairo are of their building, and the museums of Europe and Cairo have examples of their delicate inlaid and engraved brass-work, and mosaic tiles, &c. They were brave fighters. Their last achievements were on the occasion of the invasion of Egypt by Napoleon in 1798, when they fought the battle of the Pyramids, near Cairo. Treacherous massacres in 1805 and 1811 exterminated the Mameluke Princes, except a small remnant who took refuge in the Soudan, where their mediæval armour was recently seen by the British Forces employed against the Mahdi.

(Exterior Bronze-relief Panel.)

This relief shows Assur-natsir-pal, King of Assyria from 883 B.C. to 858 B.C., present with his Queen at the opening of a new building. After the death of Tiglath-Pileser until his time, Assyria was reduced to comparative powerlessness, but under him the boundaries of the empire were extended, splendid palaces, temples, and other buildings raised, whose elaborate sculptures and rich painting bear witness to the fact that in his day culminated the first period of Assyrian Art.

Gilbert Bayes was born 1874 and studied at Finsbury Schools, entering the Royal Academy Schools in 1896, where he gained the Armitage Prize of 1897, and in 1899 a Travelling Scholarship; has exhibited at the Academy since 1889.

Examples of Royal Copenhagen Porcelain Ware.

(5 specimens.)

The Royal Copenhagen Porcelain Manufactory, at Copenhagen, has existed for nearly a century and a half, and has had a somewhat chequered career. The work is executed in hard paste, and the decoration is done before the glaze is put on. The only colours yet discovered which will resist the intense “grand feu” heat are white, blue, and shades of green and grey. The mysteries of underglaze did not begin at Copenhagen, nor did the Chinese artists always make their decorations over the glaze. There are in the Franks Collection, in the British Museum, some old Chinese vases, with colours laid on under the glaze. That, Copenhagen has not yet arrived at. A glance at the later productions of the Royal Copenhagen Porcelain Manufactory will convince the lover of ceramics that the West can assimilate the ideas of the East, and reproduce them in such a manner as to be practically something new.

DOULTON WARE.

The celebrated Lambeth Pottery dates as far back as 1675. It was in 1815 that the Doultons became connected with it, when Mr. John Doulton, senior, who had served his apprenticeship at the Fulham Works, established a small pottery at Vauxhall Walk in conjunction with Mr. J. Watts, removing to Lambeth in 1826. Several of Mr. Doulton's sons were afterwards connected with the firm, including Sir Henry Doulton, who, at the age of 15, commenced work in the factory at the potter's wheel. In 1846, Henry Doulton, together with his father, erected a special factory near Lambeth Palace, of which he took the sole management.

In 1885, Mr. Henry Doulton was awarded the "Albert Medal" of the "Society of Arts," in recognition of the impulse given by him to the productions of artistic pottery in this country.

In 1887 he was knighted by Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, and died in 1897.

The Baptistery, Pisa (Models of).

The Cathedral, Pisa (Models of).

The Leaning Tower, Pisa (Models of).

Pisa is one of the oldest cities in Italy. Foremost among its fine buildings is the Cathedral (1063–1118), being 311 feet long, by 252 wide; the nave, 109 feet high. Near the Cathedral stands the round marble campanile, the "Leaning Tower," which is a magnificent specimen of Romanesque Architecture. The peculiarity about it is, that it deviates about 14 feet from the perpendicular, which is not due to the original design. The Tower began to heel over when the third storey was completed, the Architects accepted the conditions, but diminished the slope of the upper stories, in order to keep the centre of gravity well within the walls.

The Tower is 180 feet high, consists of eight stories, divided by rows of columns. The Tower was erected in 1174, but the eighth storey was not completed till the middle of the 14th Century.

The Marble Baptistery, or Church of St. John, 1152–1278, opposite the Cathedral, is circular. The interior is noted for its wonderful echo, and contains the grand and elaborate pulpit by Miccola Pisano. 1260.

Examples of Modern Lustre Ware (2). Showing the latest development of this Art.

Produced at the Golfe-Juan Pottery, France.

Golfe-Juan Pottery.—This class of pottery was first discovered and made by the Persians in the early centuries of the Christian era: the tradition was carried on by the Moors in Spain in the Middle Ages; thence the art was transferred to Gubbio, in Italy, during the Renaissance half of the last century, by De Morgan in England, and Deck in France.

The effects are produced by using metallic oxides for colouring; and when the ware is at a dull red heat a thick smoke is made in the kiln, the colours part with some of their oxygen, and are reduced more or less to a metallic condition, which gleams out through the remaining colours. The process is very uncertain in its results, and, owing to the number of failures, good pieces are somewhat costly. The examples under notice are exceptionally metallic in appearance, and will undoubtedly interest all lovers of pottery.

Maundy Money of George IV, William IV, and Victoria.

On Maundy Thursday, or Dies Mandati (the day before Good Friday), as many poor people as years that the Monarch has lived, assemble, and each person receives food, clothing, and a donation which includes a set of Maundy money—value 1d. for each year of the Sovereign's life.

The name Dies Mandati is derived from the ancient custom of washing the feet of the poor on that day. The ceremony is accompanied by the distribution of “doles,” placed in a basket, and called “Maunds.” James II was the last English Monarch who performed the ceremony in person, but the Emperor Francis Joseph has continued the custom from 1849.

The annual historic ceremony of distributing the King's Maundy gift took place at Westminster Abbey, Easter, 1906. For the first time in many years no member of the Royal Family was present. The ceremony began with an imposing procession, composed of the children and gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, choristers and clergy of the Abbey, officials, Yeomen of the Guard, and others. The gift was distributed by the Sub-Almoner, Dr. Edgar Sheppard.

12. Fac-simile of the Bayeux Tapestry. (9 frames.)

Bayeux is the chief town of an arrondissement in the Department of Calvados, in France, and is famed for the possession of the Norman Tapestry deposited in its Town Hall. The Tapestry, which consists of a web of canvas or linen cloth, 214 feet long by 20 inches wide, is embroidered in coloured thread of various colours, with a representation of the invasion and conquest of England by the Normans. Tradition assigns the work to Matilda, wife of William the Conqueror; and it is believed that if she did not stitch the whole of it with her own hand, she took part in and directed its execution by her Maids, afterwards presenting it to the Cathedral of Bayeux as a token of appreciation of the effective assistance which its Bishop, Odo, rendered to her husband at the Battle of Hastings. According to Mr. Bruce, the latest authority on the subject, the Tapestry contains, besides the figures of 505 quadrupeds, birds, sphynxes, &c., those of 623 men, 202 horses, 55 dogs, 37 buildings, 41 ships and boats, and 49 trees, in all 1,512 figures. The Tapestry is divided into 72 distinct compartments, each representing one particular historical occurrence, and bearing a descriptive Latin description. This pictorial history, for so it may be called—and, indeed, in several particulars it is more minute than any written history—opens with Harold taking leave of Edward the Confessor prior to his departure for Normandy. At one time the Tapestry was exhibited at the Hotel de Ville, Bayeux. When Napoleon thought of invading the country, he had it carried to various towns of France and publicly exhibited, so as to arouse public enthusiasm on behalf of his designs. In 1871, when the Prussians were thought to be in dangerous proximity to Bayeux, the Tapestry was taken down and enclosed in a metal cylinder, and buried in a secret place until the close of the war. It is now in the Public Library, Bayeux.
